

Company 3 Transmissions

Log 1 : My name is Dr. Craig. Today is the first day of testing with the newly discovered pathogen with incredible mutagenic capabilities. The first test consists of infecting a mouse and leaving it inside a cage. After a couple of minutes the mouse seemed to have died but 3 minutes later reanimated with increased cellular growth. The mouse was killed after it attempted to escape its cage. Ending log.

Log 4: The last 2 tests were almost entirely the same except for the way the pathogen mutated the mice. The second test had the mouse grow something around it's chest to produce a sort of acid to try and escape its cage. The third test caused the mouse to grow drill-like-nails as it attempted to escape the cage it was in. It was able to crack the cage before it was killed. The fourth test has just ended and this one shows a lot more understanding of the pathogen than we thought. The mouse grew the same drill-like-nail, but around the drill smaller ridges to make the cracks around the cage break quicker to allow for escape. Unfortunately, the mouse did all this rather quickly and was able to break out quickly, but because of our previous test we've been allowed better security. Just as the mouse was getting too close to me somebody shot it, making a gaping hole around it's oversized arm. That ends this test. Ending log.

Log 9: I've been feeling a little fatigued since Log 4, so the other researchers have been taking lead while I mostly monitor everything. The Company thinks we should stop doing human testing. After all, all that's happened is just the death of people without learning too much about how to stop or cure the pathogen. The Company says that it's up to us whether we think we should continue as they said they'll make a decision in 2 weeks. The rest of the researchers seem like they think they can learn more about the pathogen with these tests so I allowed the continuation of them.

Log 11: I can't believe I've let this research lab go out of hand. The other researchers are acting like completely different people. I should've recognized the changes in them all but I didn't. No, I chose to ignore them even when I knew they were different. I've tried contacting Company 3 multiple times but they haven't replied to me at all. I feel different...

Log 13: Nothing is wrong with the research lab. It seems like everyone was just sick with a stomach virus that got caught within a lab party. We've stopped all human testing and have secured the pathogen so it's never able to escape to the general public. I've also put in a request for a change in staff as some of the staff members would like a break to go back to their families. Ending log.

These logs were found after the outbreak of the TC-68 virus in multiple communities around the globe. To this date no one with the name "Dr.Craig" can be found working for Company 3.
